with the auditor's office as the objective. He confessed to friends while here that the Washington job had more of the lure for him.

On national politics the young and handsome speaker was less in doubt and more pliable in the hands of the interviewer. Hear him:

"Senator Burton appears to be the strongest man now regarded as a possibility for the Republican presidential nomination," he declared. "With Justice Hughes finally announcing that his name shall not be considered, Senator Burton's chances, in my judgment, are greatly enhanced. There were many Republicans who believed that Hughes could be induced to accept the nomination, but his latest announcement appears to put a quietus on his boom."

"Of all those names as possible candidates I think Senator Burton will appeal to the greatest number of Republicans, and all we need in the next election is to get out the full strength of our party."

"Senator Burton's record in Congress is unsurpassed by that of any Republican. He would be a great vote-getter, for he is an able and tireless campaigner and his position on every great public question is sound."

"I believe that West Virginia will send an instructed delegate to the Republican convention for Senator Burton."

George W. Summers, a writer man for the newspapers, as well known in Washington as he is in West Virginia, has gone to housekeeping. This statement of fact is calculated to, at first, cause a pricking up of ears in West Virginia, as it did among the scribes here when it became known about For Col. Summers's photograph is in the gallery of confirmed bachelors and has been for well, it is nobody's business, how many years. It was thought at first that something was about to happen which would cause the photo to be removed, but a series of informal little parties given by Summers at his well-arranged and tastily-furnished apartments, has convinced his friends that there is nothing doing along the line of suspicion they had. From a culinary standpoint G. W. doesn't need any help; he is an accomplished artist with the chafing dish and the high-power gas range. After one of his spreads the boys and girls feel so kind and loving toward their host that they even go so far as to insist that he tune up his fiddle and indulge in his one secret vanity. Truth to tell, Col. Summers says that Senator Chilton and John H. Holt are not in his class—they may be violinists, but he's a fiddler. Mr. Summers's new home is cosy and hospitable, nicely furnished, modern and up-to-date, and located so near the White House that he can call across the back fence to the man who lives in that place and wish him a good morning.

Over the main entrance an artist friend has inscribed "Live while you live, then die and be done with it."

Ex-Senator and Mrs. Nathan Bay Scott left Washington recently for Pasadena, Calif., where they will spend the winter. They will make the long trip by easy stages. This will mark the second winter that the Scotts have spent in that place of mild climate, sunshine and roses—and a "little rain."

Although Senator Scott built a fine home here, he and Mrs. Scott have not occupied it. They preferred to remain at the Wilard, where they have lived ever since the first time Senator Scott came to the Senate. The new home is occupied by Captain and Mrs. Guy Scott and their interesting children.

Joseph McLane, intimate and confidential friend of ex-Senator Davis Elkins, and about the busiest little politician in West Virginia, has left for the northern part of the state to see to it that some of the local politicians get their ideas on straight. And hearing that while Mr. Elkins has picked Judge Robinson to win the Republican nomination for governor, friend McLane is holding back on taking that end of it. Higher up the political scale he has, however, made his choice. It is for the nomination of ex-Senator Burton and is expected to do some Burton coasting on this and subsequent trips into the home state.

Mrs. Holmes Moss, of Parkersburg, will arrive in the city the first of the week and will spend the winter with Representative and Mrs. Hunter Moss and family at their apartments in the Sheridans.

Representative Adam Littlepage, of

Col. Vernon E. Johnson who fought and won that title in lieu of Iron crosses under Governor W. E. Glasscock, commander-in-chief of West Virginia's standing army for four years—Col. Johnson, of Berkeley Springs, was in the city recently. Need it be stated that Col. Johnson is also speaker of the house of delegates and also has a right to have it stated in his biography that he traveled in state befitting his commission, to the San Francisco Exposition, where, on West Virginia Day, as the personal representative of Governor Hatfield he read the latter's address, and in the social gayeties of that celebration upheld the traditions of the state's "kultur" with distinguished grace and satisfactorily modulated dignity.

According to current writings of some of the state's most eminent journalists, Col. Johnson has it in mind to undertake a new political venture, but is undecided whether it shall be in the direction of the House of Representatives, coming up from the Second district, or whether it shall be a place on the state ticket.

GIRL INFECTS HERSELF WITH GERMS TO PROVE CURE FOR SOLDIERS SAFE

Miss Mary Davies.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—Miss Mary Davies is the latest heroine of the war. Miss Davies won this distinction by exposing herself, with calm deliberation, to a death more frightful than that of the bullet—to a death by the horrible and loathsome disease known as gas gangrene, which has slain thousands of soldiers in the last year owing to the virtual impossibility of keeping the wounds received in the trenches clean and aseptic.

Dr. Kenneth Taylor, of Minnesota, attached to the American hospital at Paris, worked out a treatment for gas gangrene by injections of quinine hydrochloride, which he felt sure would prove emaciating. He experimented with guinea pigs, but these results were so doubtful that he did not dare try it on a human being.

Miss Davies, his assistant, had faith in the method of treatment, but she knew the doctor would not use it on his patients without better proof of its value. Therefore Miss Davies, without Dr. Taylor's knowledge, deliberately infected herself with gas gangrene bacilli and then reported to
